

UNHERD

The Real Coronavirus Conspiracy

WE COULD HAVE KILLED THE NOVEL CORONAVIRUS MONTHS AGO SIMPLY AND INEXPENSIVELY THROUGH NON-INVASIVE TESTING. HAVE WE BEEN BLINDED BY BIG PHARMA? WRITES DR ROBERT EPSTEIN

THESE days the internet is overflowing with conspiracy theories about the novel coronavirus – SARS-CoV-2 – which is about to put us, in the US, through the deadliest flu season since the winter of 1918. It was designed in a Chinese lab; no, it was designed in a bioweapons lab at Fort Detrick. No, it was engineered by a cabal led by Bill Gates, who plans to inject everyone with a vaccine that contains a tracking chip that will be activated by the new 5G phone signals.

Meanwhile, dark forces have supposedly suppressed powerful treatments and cures for COVID-19, among them hydroxychloroquine, suramin, mustard oil, cow urine, and, of course, gargling with Lysol.

There's so much noise out there most of us are blind to the actual coronavirus conspiracy, and it's not a theory. Currently, pharmaceutical and biotech companies around the world are simultaneously developing at least 128 coronavirus vaccines, and some are mass producing hundreds of millions of doses just in case they prove to be safe and effective. Because nearly all these vaccines will ultimately fall short, virtually all those doses will ultimately be flushed down a very large toilet. (Watch out for tap water!)

Meanwhile, these companies are being paid hundreds of billions of dollars by governments worldwide. Will taxpayers get refunds for the failed efforts? Of course not. The word windfall doesn't even begin to capture what an obscene boon this is for Big Pharma and its younger sibling, Big Biotech.

Understandably, the vast majority of people surveyed say they have no intention of getting vaccinated or of allowing their children to be vaccinated.

Anyway, vaccines don't always defeat pathogens. The flu vaccine hasn't eradicated influenza, which kills as many as 650,000 people worldwide each year, and the world has been waiting for an AIDS vaccine since 1981.

The real tragedy here is that the novel coronavirus could have been eradicated months ago without a vaccine. Since March, I've published seven articles about a practical, inexpensive, common-sense solution to the coronavirus problem – a plan I now call the Carrier Separation Plan – and an eighth article is currently under review by a medical journal.

The plan, which has been successfully implemented in varying degrees at several companies, in small towns, and in at least one large city, is so commonsensical that when I described it on Tucker Carlson's show in April, he responded, "That's such a sensible solution ... Why has it not occurred to anyone?"

ILLUSTRATION BY GAVIN MORRISON

“The real tragedy here is that the novel coronavirus could have been eradicated months ago without a vaccine.”

Step 1: The president declares in about two months – on National Testing Day – we'll all join together to defeat the virus. Lots of positive messaging follows daily from government leaders and celebs.

Step 2: The postal service mails simple, non-invasive self-test devices to every home in the country, as well as to schools, churches and businesses. (And, yes, such devices exist, and they will cost pennies when mass produced.)

Step 3: When that day arrives, everyone in the country self-tests, cheered on by the president, his family and thought leaders nationwide as they themselves self-test, and the carriers then immediately self-isolate. Hotel rooms are provided for people who need them, and because people are testing themselves and their children, their privacy is protected. With the carriers now separated from the non-carriers, viral transmission stops.

Step 4: Later that day, the non-carriers reopen the entire society with no need for masks or social distancing.

Step 5: Secondary screening – barrels-full of the test devices at the doors to buildings where people congregate – keeps us safe. If people test positive, they're sent home.

Step 6: A few weeks later, the virus, having been killed by the immune systems of the carriers, is eradicated from the population – no need for a vaccine.

The real conspiracy has nothing to do with Bill Gates; it's all about the orgiastic relationship between government and pharma. 1